The three-part cards are the perfect activity to add to your independent learning trays. The cards can be cut into three pieces: one full flash card, one label, and one picture. Present the cards to the child in three steps. First, place the whole picture/word card on the floor or table. Then the picture-only card is set beside the first card. The final step is to place the label below the second picture. After completing the first set of cards, the child can move to the second set. The adult can continue to present the pieces one at a time, or if the child shows interest in independence, they can complete the entire stack of cards themselves. After finishing the set, the student can clean up and return the cards to their work tray.

Other materials that can be useful for three-part cards include a three-section wooden box, a three-pocket folder, or a work mat. Laminate the cards for extended use and durability.
